Option 2 (our preferred option)

My comments on this proposal

-Firstly the amount of money spent on a road needs to reflect its use. New Zealand is not wealthy enough to provide quality raiding everywhere. If logging trucks damage the tar seal then maybe those roads should remain gravel. -Secondly Vehicle registration has reduced substantially in the last 20years. This is where the money needs to come from not the primary producer who has taken a long term investment that creates many jobs and overseas funds for the country. Forestry is already a marginal investment for the tree growers. If trucks are damaging the roads then truck operators should pay. This way the expense can be passed onto the final consumer and not create an eleventh hour unpredicted expense for those who have invested long term industry. Any rate like this needs to be implemented gradually so that industry can budget for it and not create knee jerk decisions that will adversely effect future investment.
